Edith Stein: Self-Portrait in Letters

LETTERS to ROMAN INGARDEN

These personal letters—most published here for the first time in English—offer an intimate glimpse into the extraordinary intellectual and spiritual journey of Edith Stein (later St. Teresa Benedicta of the Cross) through her more than 20-year correspondence with a fellow philosopher and friend.

Edith Stein (1891–1942) and Roman Ingarden (1893–1970) were both students of Edmund Husserl, the father of phenomenology. Stein and Ingarden corresponded extensively between 1917 and 1938. The letters reveal a rich professional and personal friendship that spanned the adult lives of two important 20th-century thinkers.

While we do not have Ingarden's letters to Edith Stein, these 162 of hers to him offer the reader a fascinating window into her life as a student, philosopher, convert from Judaism to Catholicism, Carmelite nun, and eventual martyr of Hitler's death camps.

The letters also help us understand Ingarden and his life as a phenomenologist and aesthetician in Polish academia—including his intellectual development as he brought phenomenology to Poland, his writings, and the editorial assistance Edith Stein provided for all the works he published in German.

Translated from the newest critical German edition by Dr. Hugh Candler Hunt, this premiere English edition of her correspondence—volume 12 of ICS Publications' Collected Works of Edith Stein (CWES)—gives us fresh insight into the life and personality of this remarkable woman.
